"I will tell of Dionysus, how he appeared by the shore, seeming like a stripling in the first flush of manhood: his rich, dark hair was waving about him. Over the sparkling sea came Tyrsenian pirates, and when they saw him, they sprang out quickly, seizing him straightway; for they thought him the son of heaven-nurtured kings. They sought to bind him with rude bonds, but the withes fell far away from his hands and feet: and he sat with a smile in his dark eyes...."

– Paraphrased from the 7th Homeric Hymn.
